Jesus came to set the earth on fire

The gospel reading of this Sunday tells us that Jesus came to set the earth on fire, not to establish peace but division on this earth. It appears disturbing to hear that “a household of five will be divided, three against two and two against three”.

What does Jesus really mean? To be baptized as a disciple of Christ, we are set apart from the rest. When we embrace the values of Christ, we see the world differently from others. Our words and actions are set apart from the world.

Personally speaking, I can see the difference. I was brought up in an environment where there was much fear and superstition. There was always talk about “offending spirits” and bad luck. It was deemed as a taboo to attend a wake and a wedding within the same week. My parents even created a door in our home for good fengshui. Hospital was a place of disease and germs. There were a lot of things to avoid to avert bad luck. Looking back, it was a miserable life of fear and restraint.

When I became a Catholic and understood that God reigns supreme, these shackles of the past were removed. I felt free, free to love and be there for the people who needed care and support. I was assured that all acts of love and charity are anchored on Jesus.

From my short sharing, we can see that perspectives, values and views differ between persons who are baptized and have faith in the Lord and those who only believe in themselves.

I recall a conversation I had with my colleague. She vehemently indicated that she cannot forgive her husband if he had done her wrong as she could not accept any imperfection in the relationship. I reflected and realized that my idea of perfection had also changed over the years. I would have said the same if I had no God in my life.

A fellow Catholic shared with me that we are all works in progress, on a journey. No one is perfect, only God. She shared that since we are not perfect ourselves, it was not easy to judge another. She was always open and listening, never judging. Understanding her background and the context has humbled me. I must admit that I am still “work in progress” when it comes to judging others. I catch my own thoughts and try to reframe.

Although we are set apart from the world, we are asked to be in the world to make a difference. Jesus came to set the earth on fire. As his baptized disciples, we are called to ignite love in the world.
